

LIVE PERFORMANCE VENUES

Selfishly, my vote goes to Gamble Auditorium on the campus of Baldwin Wallace University - home of the BW Men's Chorus, of which I am a member.

CODA's underground location, graffiti walls, and great cocktails make you feel a little rock-n-roll. It's a great place to catch a show after dinner.

The Agora Theatre has a wide variety of acts playing and semi-recently completed a huge renovation convergence-continuum is one of my favorite live performance venues. The small and intimate setting creates an atmosphere where you are part of the show. They push boundaries relating to structure and space, and they always create a memorable experience.

Beachland Ballroom gives new artists a platform (the Black Keys played their first show there!) and welcomes many legends to their stage. They also have a positive impact on the local neighborhood.

Lakewood Civic Auditorium is a nontraditional spot to catch some great music up close. My favorite memory is seeing Chris Cornell there in 2013.

I appreciate Cleveland's intimate theaters, each with its own personality. Ensemble Theatre and Karamu House are true gems.

My husband and I have had season tickets to the KeyBank Broadway Series for years. We've seen some of the best shows in the world in the Playhouse Square theaters.

Cleveland Play House offers engaging and provocative theater for all ages in magnificently restored settings.

My favorite live performance venue is going to see a concert at the House of Blues. Since the weather is changing, this is a great indoor spot to see a variety of performances.

Considered one of the world's most beautiful concert halls, Severance Hall's majestic fusion of design styles and architecture makes it a must see. It also doesn't hurt to have the world-class Cleveland Orchestra call it home.

Sometimes I look for a space with an international yet comfortable feel like Nighttown. At other times, I want to celebrate a space that transforms itself and its audience, like Dobama Theatre.

Cleveland Masonic Temple Auditorium boasts an abundance of history and mystique and is an intimate, fun place to see a live show.
